If you were perhaps considering attending the upcoming GCTII-sponsored 2-day immersion in the requirements of an “adequate” Accounting System, but hadn’t yet made up your mind ...

If you were perhaps “on the bubble” as to whether to visit San Diego, California, in late May or else stay in your cubicle under the fluorescent lights and work on your filing ...

If you were hesitant to request the funds from your boss, who keeps complaining about lack of budget ...

... well, you need to make a decision. You need to make a call. Registration is ending soon.

The cost -- $1,095 for two days’ of discussion and knowledge-sharing, is right in line with what other popular seminars charge; and it’s significantly less than some charge participants.

Plus: Nick Sanders will be doing the instructing, with his latest “war stories” about business system audits gone wrong, and what to do to keep that from happening to your company—all delivered with maximum sarcasm and snark.

Get out of your cubicle and get to San Diego for some SoCal sun; you won’t regret it
